Message in a Bottle

A message in a bottle is a form of communication in which a message is sealed typically in a bottle and released into a large body of water. Messages in bottles have been used in scientific studies of ocean currents, to send distress messages from those believing themselves to be doomed, invitations to prospective pen pals, or romantic letters sent to actual or imagined love interests.

But before you biff a bottle, consider the environment!

Sir David Attenborough, famed naturalist said "As human beings we are more urbanised than ever before, and we are out of touch with the natural world, yet we are 100% dependent on its resources."

Natural history travel has never been more popular, or important. Expedition guides, rangers, marine biologists and other natural history specialists unmatched in their level of expertise, are passionate about the environment and raising conservation awareness as well as providing once in a lifetime, beyond your imagination thrilling travel experiences. Ruud Kleinpaste, entomologist said "We are surrounded by genius and inspiration". Cruise World has a wide range of natural history travel product enabling you to experience the genius and inspiration of our natural planet. Our top picks...

UNCruise: Provide guests an enriching adventure travel experience and inspire an appreciation of local cultures and the natural world. Paddle and hike. Go eye-to-eye with wildlife. Embrace the wilderness, or travel in the footsteps of historic explorers. You're in for the experience of a lifetime.
